In Windows Explorer, locate the file that contains the license key...The cardiac conduction system is a complex network of specialized cardiomyocytes that electrically excite or silence the contractile myocardium, depending on their location and the signal they receive. Maintaining electrical stability in this dynamic network is critical to the execution of cardiac function. Only when the myocardium contracts would certain specialized cardiomyocytes (sinus node, atrium, atrioventricular node, etc.) depolarize and activate their electrical impulses to the vasculature (via the sinoatrial and atrioventricular node), which then leads to a heart beat. Failing to maintain stable impulses through this complex, specialized electrical network can cause arrhythmias, which can lead to heart failure and death. In fact, the conduction system is often a major locus for reentrant arrhythmias such as ventricular tachycardia and atrial fibrillation. As the heart pumps more blood, the concentration of the ionic components of the extracellular space and blood plasma increases which in turn increases the magnitude of the cardiac action potential. The increased concentration of ions requires more energy for the cardiac muscle to pump blood, leading to heart
